Biography

Victoria Scott-Miller is a Raleigh-based author and owner of the trailblazing, independent, globally recognized Liberation Station Bookstore, specializing in children's literature. The store has been spotlighted in numerous media outlets, including the Washington Post, Good Morning America, and CNN. As an innovator, liberation strategist, and literacy advocate, Victoria believes in the power of community and creates initiatives that promote legacy building, generational safekeeping, and historical guardianship for marginalized voices.

Victoria attributes her writing style and inspiration to her experiences growing up in Memphis, TN. When she is not championing the amplification of Black voices, she enjoys hiking, roller-skating, and visiting art museums with her husband Duane, nuclear-veteran and avid gardener, their two sons Langston and Emerson, and a parakeet named Garvey.
